

The Autism Society of Connecticut
and
The Connecticut Autism Spectrum Resource Center

have teamed up to provide

"A Day of Paraprofessional Training"

Paraprofessionals are key players on the teams that work with our kids. They are with our children all day implementing the goals and objectives that the team has agreed upon. Training and education make for a successful para. ASCONN and ASRC have put together an unparalleled opportunity for paras (and those who work with and supervise them) to receive training from two dynamic experts in the field of autism. Dr. Michael Powers and Dr. Diane Twachtman-Cullen will present a day long workshop specifically geared for paraprofessionals.

Saturday, October 3, 2009

Cost: $25 for a full day workshop!

Learn from the Experts.

At this conference, paraprofessionals will expand their knowledge, learn and improve needed skills to work more effectively with their autism spectrum students from pre-school through high school. the program will provide training on common characteristics, intervention options and strategies including behavior management and social skills teaching. The goal of this training is to give paraprofessionals (and those who work with them) a mix of strategies and tools they can use to increase competency and confidence.

Target audience: paraprofessionals and those who manage and interact with them, including regular education teachers, special education teachers, administrators, allied and related services personnel.
